

Abstract of the Disclosure

A device useful in forming a seal between a hysteroscope instrument and a cervical canal during diagnostic or surgical procedures known as hysteroscopy. The 5 device grasps the exterior of the cervical canal pressing the cervical canal inwardly toward the outer surface of the hysteroscope instrument forming a seal between the outer surface of the hysteroscope instrument and the cervical canal, thereby preventing fluid or gas from exiting the cervical canal.